U.S. Supreme Court divided over gay, transgender employment protection

Are LGBTQ workers covered under Title VII?

U.S. Supreme Court justices on Tuesday appeared divided over whether a landmark decades-old federal law prohibiting sex discrimination in the workplace protects gay and transgender employees as they heard arguments in one of the biggest cases of their current term.

The four liberal justices on the nine-member court signaled sympathy toward arguments that LGBT workers are covered under Title VII of the Civil Rights Act of 1964, which forbids employers from discriminating against employees on the basis of sex as well as race, color, national origin and religion.

Some of the five conservative justices expressed reservations toward extending protection to gay employees. However, one of them, Justice Neil Gorsuch, asked questions of both sides indicating potential sympathy for the workers. When analyzing whether a person was fired on the basis of sexual orientation, Gorsuch said sex seemed to be a "contributing cause."

But Gorsuch later in the arguments voiced concern that the court would be overstepping its role if it ruled in favor of gay and transgender workers instead of letting Congress legislate on the subject. Gorsuch warned of "massive social upheaval" that could result from such a ruling.

"It's a question of judicial modesty," Gorsuch said.

Conservative Justice Samuel Alito said that if the court decides that Title VII protects gays and lesbians it would effectively be rewriting a law enacted by Congress in a way that was never intended by the lawmakers who passed it. Alito said the Supreme Court would be seen as deciding "a major policy question" that Congress

"Do fire Trump. Don't fire LGBTQ workers,"

LGBTQ activists chant would normally legislate on.

The roughly two hours of arguments were held on the second day of the court's new nine-month term.

The court's 5-4 conservative majority includes two justices — Gorsuch and Brett Kavanaugh — appointed by President Donald Trump, whose administration has argued that Title VII does not cover sexual orientation or gender identity.

Kavanaugh said little to indicate how he might vote. Conservative Justice Clarence Thomas, who missed the opening day of the court's term on Monday with an illness, was at the arguments but asked no questions, as is his custom.

The Supreme Court

delivered an important gay rights decision in 2015 legalizing same-sex marriage nationwide. Its dynamics on LGBT issues, however, changed following the 2018 retirement of Justice Anthony Kennedy, a conservative who backed gay rights in major cases and wrote the same-sex marriage ruling.

The legal fight focuses on the definition of "sex" in Title VII. The plaintiffs, along with civil rights groups and many large companies, have argued that discriminating against gay and transgender workers is inherently based on their sex and consequently is illegal.

Liberal justices noted that Title VII also protects against stereotyping people based on gender, and were skeptical of arguments pressed by the Trump administration's lawyer, Solicitor General Noel Francisco, and a lawyer representing the employers that Title VII does not cover sexual orientation because it is a separate trait than sex.

Liberal Justice Elena

Actress and transgender rights advocate Laverne Cox

Kagan said the court has always analyzed such discrimination cases in a simple way: Would it have happened if the person were a different sex? "Obviously the same thing would not have happened," Kagan said.

A couple of hundred demonstrators advocating for LGBT rights gathered a short distance from the white marble courthouse on an overcast day in the U.S. capital. They chanted for equal rights and held signs including ones that read, "Do fire Trump. Don't fire LGBTQ workers." "Discrimination is bad for business" and "LGBT Americans power our economy."

"I am here because I'm a queer person and right now my right to live my life as everyone else is being determined by nine people, none of whom are queer, all of whom are cisgender," said Washington resident Raegan Davis, 21

STD cases in U.S. rose to record high in 2018

2 The number of Americans who were diagnosed with a sexually transmitted disease (STD) last year rose to a record high, U.S. health officials said on Tuesday, partly because funding for local health departments has dropped. Nearly 2.46 million cases of chlamydia, gonorrhea, syphilis and other STDs were reported in 2018, the U.S. Centers for Disease Control and Prevention (CDC) said in a report.

The total includes some 1,300 cases of congenital syphilis in newborns. The rate of infection climbed steadily between 2014 and 2018, resulting in a 71% jump in the number of syphilis cases, a 63% increase in gonorrhea and a 19% rise in chlamydia during that period. Budget cuts, clinic closures, less screening and patient follow-up has accounted for the increased disease rates, health officials said. REUTERS

Lawsuit to allege Fortnite as addictive as drugs

3 A Montreal-based law firm is preparing a class action suit on behalf of two parents who claim that the popular game Fortnite is as addictive as cocaine. The firm, Calix Legal, represents unidentified plaintiffs who are the parents of a 10- and 15-year-old. The legal action alleges that Fortnite, when played for a long period, causes the player's brain to release the "pleasure hormone, dopamine" in the same way that some drugs create a chemical addiction. "Epic Games, when they created Fortnite, for years and years, hired psychologists — they really dug into the human brain and they really made the effort to make it as addictive as possible," Alessandra Esposito Chartrand, a Calix Legal attorney, said on CBC.ca. "They knowingly put on the market a very, very addictive game which was also geared toward youth." REUTERS

U.N. may not have money to pay staff next month

4 The United Nations may not have enough money for staff salaries next month if member states don't pay what they owe, U.N. Secretary-General Antonio Guterres warned on Tuesday. He told the 193-member U.N. General Assembly's budget committee that if he had not worked since January to cut spending then the "we would not have had the liquidity to support" the annual gathering of world leaders last month. "This month, we will reach the deepest deficit of the decade. We risk ... entering November without enough cash to cover payrolls," said Guterres. "Our work and our reforms are at risk." The United States is the largest contributor — responsible for 22 percent of the more than $3.3 billion regular budget for 2019, which pays for work including political, humanitarian, disarmament, economic and social affairs and communications. ## Woman from western Mass. is state's first vaping fatality Massachusetts loses a 60 year-old woman from vaping-related lung illness.

A woman in her 60s from Hampshire County has died of a vaping-related lung illness, the first such case in Massachusetts, according to the Department of Public Health. DPH reported the death to the U.S. Centers for Disease Control, but did not publicly identify the woman or say when she died.

"The number of confirmed and probable cases of vaping-associated lung injury we're seeing continues to escalate and today I was deeply saddened to hear about the death of a patient who had this illness," DPH Commissioner Monica Bharel said.

The department said the woman was among 121 suspected cases physicians have reported to the state since it began mandating that clinicians immediately report any unexplained vaping-associated lung injury to the DPH.

Of those 121 suspected cases reported to DPH, the department said nine have been confirmed as vaping-associated lung injury and another 10 are "probable for meeting the CDC's definition." At least 39 of the reports to DPH were for patients who have been ruled out as having vaping-associated lung injury, the department said.

On Sept. 24, Gov. Charlie Baker banned the sale of all vaping products in Massachusetts for four months while federal and state public health officials continue to investigate a spate of lung illnesses connected to vaping nicotine and/or THC derived from marijuana.

CLF plans to sue MassDOT over HOV lane removal

The removal of a high occupancy vehicle lane on Interstate 93 violated the Clean Air Act, state law and a Big Dig-era emissions settlement, according to the forces behind a planned lawsuit against the Massachusetts Department of Transportation.

The Conservation Law Foundation asserts that MassDOT illegally eliminated the HOV lane on May 14 to allow all traffic to use it north of Boston.

"With the daily traffic nightmare on our roads, opening this lane to all cars is short-sighted, slows commutes for bus riders, and violates the law," Staci Rubin, senior attorney at CLF, said in a statement Tuesday outlining the lawsuit plans. "Punishing people for carpooling and taking public transit is the exact opposite of good policy. For the sake of our environment and the health and well-being of residents north of Boston, the state must realize its mistake and undo this change immediately."

The state is trying to accommodate motorists while managing construction projects north of the city and reduced lanes on the Tobin Bridge.

CLF said the state has 60 days to respond to its notice of intent to sue, before the lawsuit is officially filed.

Transportation Secretary Stephanie Pollack said Tuesday that her office just received notice of the suit. A response was expected after Metro's deadline. STATE HOUSE NEWS SERVICE

Tim Heidecker and Gregg Turkington on foolish pursuit of power in "Mister America"

The team behind "On Cinema" expand their universe with this hilarious new film

patrick.king@metro.us

Saying that the comedic universe that both Tim Heidecker and Gregg Turkington have created with their long-running Adult Swim series "On Cinema at the Cinema" is daunting would be a huge understatement. But as the show is now entering its 11th season of the two "film buffs" poorly dissecting the hit movies of the day and continuously creating thick clouds of awkward tension, there is one central strain of human behavior the two comedians are always interested in exploring: the know it all who really knows nothing after all.

With their new film, "Mister America", Heidecker and Turkington – along with director and co-writer Eric Natticcola – pick up with the character of "Tim Heidecker" after clearing his name of a murder charge he was facing after 20 teenagers died at a music festival he had put on after using vape samples he had passed out for free. The court case was, of course, aired as a non-stop C-SPAN style special on Adult Swim's website. Drunk on his power of winning this case after representing himself in court, Heidecker decides to run for the position of District Attorney of San Bernardino, CA and take the seat of the current DA who tried to put him away, Vincent Rosetti – whom Heidecker refers to as a "rat" in his campaign and in the press.

The power-hungry and self-righteous character that Heidecker has cultivated after all of these years of splintering off into new ventures from his tiny film review show has finally turned into the monster we all feared he might become. But in many ways, he has some of the same desires that both our politicians and public figures have today.

"The no-self awareness that a lot of politicians and a lot of public figures have and their audacity," says Heidecker on the ripped from life inspirations behind his anti-hero version of himself. "Also," he adds, "we are interested in people with no talent who have this continuous drive to push forward despite their lack of ability. Also, we always love watching people fail and watching people lose. At the beginning of this film we thought let's never raise the stakes to a place where you'd think there's a chance that he could win... something we haven't really seen is somebody so outside of the system running for something and the audience is way ahead of it."

What sets this film apart from other spin-offs of the "On Cinema" universe, like Tim's Jack Bauer-esque TV show "Dekkar", is that the film is, supposedly, being made by a student filmmaker who is interested in Heidecker's campaign and the scandal following him after narrowly escaping jail-time for all of those vape-based murders.

Of course, the young filmmaker had to reach out to one of Heidecker's most credible character witnesses, his co-host of "On Cinema", "Gregg Turkington". Throughout the film Turkington, in typical fashion, would much rather spout out pointless film trivia facts, lavishing his camera time to further build up his brand as an aficionado. But as the film reaches its heated showdown between the two, you see that both are blinded in different ways by their pursuits to obtain different kinds of power. And failing miserably, of course.

"I think we both have our own agendas. We're really two sides of the same coin. Tim is more of a go-getter who makes things happen. Both of us have things that we are trying to do and are going to use whatever it takes to make it happen. I think there are folks that have an unearned confidence. I've met people that have inspired my character where I'll say, 'I cannot believe how confident and sure of yourself you are when you've done literally nothing.' I don't know where that comes from! I've done a lot of things but I don't have that kind of confidence. Most people I know in the arts or any field don't have that kind of confidence. If I were to make a list of people who were most confident, a lot of them would be people who have done nothing. It's this weird delusion and it's unshakeable," explains Turkington with a laugh.

"The two guys are such experts, or say that they are experts, and have intractable opinions on things, are very self-righteous," adds Heidecker. "But when it comes time to actually do things or make things, there is no display of understanding of how things of quality should be made."

"Mister America" will be in select theaters this Friday. For showtimes and more information, head over to misteramericafilm.com.

The Politician: fashion is a delicious & guilty pleasure

Costume designers Lou Eyrich and Claire Parkinson were able to recreate camp, dark and pop spirit of Ryan Murphy in the new Netflix series. With some characters, Metro explains why this series is a real visual delight. LUZ LANCHERO SMWN

GEORGINA HOBART ELEGANT ECCENTRICITY

Only the adoptive mother of Payton (played by Gwyneth Paltrow) could work in the garden in a very expensive Oscar de la Renta dress. But that was the idea, which is not so far-fetched in the surreal and opulent universe that Murphy imagined for the series. Lou Eyrich was in charge of Georgina's wardrobe, featuring impressive caftans, as well as Gucci blouses and costumes by African designer Duro Olowu. She is always hyper-produced, but majestic in her role as an unhappy millionaire woman.

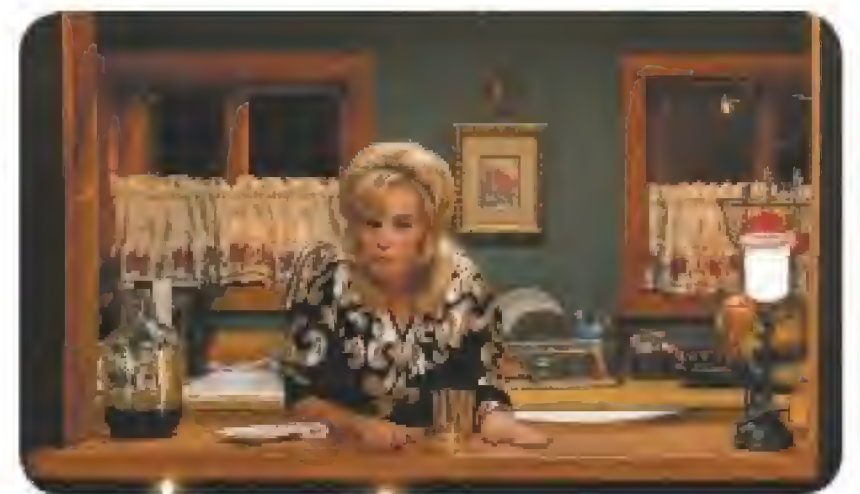

"It is very colorful, and also extravagant, in the most lavish sense of the word. Georgina is able to wear an Oscar de la Renta red dress, custom gardening gloves and a matching Halston hat to water the plants. Or an evening dress for dinner. She could use diamonds at all hours, she is always ready for a charity gala," Eyrich said about the character, whose outfits were also inspired by two famous characters of the seventies, Babe Paley and Talitha Getty. All this complemented by expensive jewellery of Harry Winston, worth $9 million.

DUSTY JACKSON SEVENTIES KITSCH

The antipode of Georgina is Dusty Jackson, played by Jessica Lange, muse of Ryan Murphy. The aesthetics of Dolly Parton and the seventies never left her. She is the Machiavellian grandmother of a young woman with cancer, Infinity, played by Zoey Deutch. "It is very likely that she has been wearing the same clothes for twenty years. She uses youth clothes and tries to look younger than she is, but she is also very satisfied with her appearance. She doesn't spend money on clothes, while Georgina spends too much," Eyrich explained.

"People remain anchored at the time they feel most attractive," stylist Chris Clark added. "We thought Dusty had been anchored in the 70s and we created a look based on a client of my mother. My mother was a waitress for 25 years at Bob's Big Boy, in Phoenix, Arizona. And that woman was wearing a very stylized cupped mullet." Also, along with the makeup designer, Eryn Krueger Mekash, they created someone who thought she was elegant, but was not. "To tell that story, we painted Jessica's eyes a lot and we also resorted to manicure. We ordered some fake nails made by hand, and we put some tiny charms on those of the little fingers. They were very funny," Clark added. The look was complemented by great glasses of the time, animal print scarves and makeup.

ASTRID SLOAN

THE DARK QUEEN BEE

Astrid Sloan, Payton's lifelong contender and enemy, is played by the lovely Lucy Boynton, who is already a style icon by herself. She has starred in fashion editorials with several magazines thanks to her eclectic and refined looks. In the series, costume designer Claire Parkinson enhances her outfit with garments from Topshop, Zara, as well as with mini bags, long stockings in the style of nineties, and white boots. She is the queen of her high school, a dark and distorted Queen Bee. And that spirit is seen in the looks that go according to the history and transformation of her character. There are two key pieces at the beginning of her history: a delicious Victorian velvet dress from Zara and another flowered green dress from Topshop, which show the elegant innocence.

It is then followed by Tweed dress and a pink edged shirt, which changes momentarily for jumpers, hot pants and leather jackets (her Marc Jacobs embroidered jumper is a contemporary grunge dream). This is how Astrid mixes the 60s and 70s with the millennial keys through urban and sporty clothes.

PAYTON HOBART

THE QUINTESSENTIAL POLITICIAN

This is why the series has this name. It tells the story about the development of duality between being a teenager with conflicts and the size of own ambitions. And that is reflected in this character's clothing. While his adoptive brothers reflect the most exaggerated and cliché version of preppy culture — such as dressing in uniforms with blazers and sweaters — Parkinson created Payton as a man who dresses in strong colors, with a classic American look, tailored suit, but at the same time contemporary and always correct. In fact, that is the key to his character, as stylist Chris Clark explains: "He is always impeccable. That's why we cut his hair twice a week, to make sure he was exactly the same all season. He was like a sculpture, very accurate. We used very specific products and techniques to ensure that his appearance remained the same."

The crux of the character and the series is that a politician is born, but it is also made. And that image can crumble in the absence of authenticity, one of Payton's central conflicts throughout the series.

Patriots' QB culture bodes well for life after Brady

Former Pats' backups Jimmy G and Jacoby Brissett are thriving.

matt.burke@metro.us

At 42-years of age, every game that Tom Brady suits up in a Patriots uniform is gravy.

You never know which snap is going to be your last in the brutal game of pro football, particularly when you're at the advanced pro sports age that Brady finds himself at in 2019.

There was one play in the blowout win over Washington that made many Pats fans spit out their IPAs, when Brady took off for a run, slid, and got his knee brace caught in the Landover, Maryland turf. It was one awkward landing, one that could have done considerable knee damage.

Yet, Brady popped up unscathed – save for the clumps of dirt hanging out of the brace.

Brady's advanced age, combined with the fact that he could possibly become a free agent this winter (or retire) – has given rise to thoughts of life without Brady.

It'll be a sad day when it all comes to an end, no doubt, but the Patriots have shown several times under Bill Belichick that they have a good eye for talent at the quarterback position.

Look no further than Brady's two backup QBs from the 2016 season.

Colts quarterback Jacoby Brissett has the Colts riding high with a 3-2 record, and 49ers signal-caller Jimmy Garoppolo has the Niners at 4-0. San Fran is now the only undefeated team left in the NFL outside of the Patriots.

Brissett has 10 TD passes so far this season, which is equal to Brady, and is just two TDs behind Russell Wilson for tops in the league.

Garoppolo, meanwhile, has a 99.4 passer rating on the season – which coincidentally is tied on the nose with Brady.

Brissett's Colts and Garoppolo's Niners are two of the surprise teams of the early NFL season, and there could be an AFC playoff game looming between Brissett and the Pats. Perhaps there could even be a dream Pats – Niners Super Bowl coming this February, considering how good Garoppolo's team looked Monday night in a 31-3 spanking of the Browns.

Jimmy Garoppolo, center, and Jacoby Brissett, right, are thriving outside of New England in 2019.

Truth be told – Belichick began preparing for life after Brady back in 2014 when he selected Garoppolo in the second round of that year's draft, and it's not blasphemous to suggest that the Pats head coach would have traded Brady away a couple years back if owner Robert Kraft shared his ruthless nature.

A Patriots assistant told ESPN's Ian O'Connor last year that Belichick's system could make Super Bowl quarterbacks out of most starters in the league.

"I don't think coaches view Tom as special as everyone else in football does," the assistant coach said. "Mr. Kraft thinks Tom is the greatest gift ever, but the coaches don't."

Brady is still producing at a top level so far this season, though he hasn't been his typical perfect self in recent weeks – throwing ill-advised interceptions against the Bills and Redskins.

Current back-up QB Jarrett Stidham certainly isn't taking Brady's job this season, and given the pick-6 we saw him throw against Jets he might never get a crack at a starting NFL gig.

But the Patriots do have a model in place. Young, back-up QBs for the Patriots can learn a lot during their time in Foxboro.

Maybe Stidham is the next Garoppolo or Brissett. It's a longshot, but maybe he replaces Brady next season or the year after. Maybe the Patriots' next starting QB is still in high school.

Who knows for sure?

But as we've seen this season with Garoppolo and Brissett – the Patriots have a thriving culture at the quarterback position.

Boston College 4-2 against the spread so far in 2019

For the second straight week, Boston College played well enough as underdogs to cover a low point spread, but not enough to win their game outright.

BC (+5) lost at Louisville 41-39 this past Saturday in a high-scoring thriller. That after losing 27-24 the prior week to Wake Forest at +4.5.

Game stats suggest the Eagles were lucky to stay so close to the Cardinals. Louisville won total yardage 664-563, yards-per-play 8.5 to 7.2, third down conversions 50-27 percent, and turnovers 2-0. Alarming defensive numbers for the visitor, reminiscent of BC's home debacle against Kansas a few weeks earlier.

Note that Boston College quarterback Anthony Brown injured his knee in the second quarter and watched the rest of the game on crutches. Backup Dennis Grossel could only manage a passing line of 9/24/1/11, but did throw three touchdown tosses in the red zone. Louisville totaled 428 passing yards.

The straight up loss dropped BC to 3-3 on the season, but the valiant cover lifted them to 4-2 against the point spread (a 67 percent success rate).

For now, bowl eligibility still likely depends on what happens Oct. 19 vs. North Carolina State (after a bye this Saturday), Nov. 2 at Syracuse, and Nov. 9 vs. Florida State. Boston College will be road underdogs at Clemson, Notre Dame, and Pittsburgh in their other three games.

Historically, the sharpest influences in college football betting markets show a lot of respect for defense. Not much optimism at the moment that BC will close strong. The market isn't pricing the Eagles as "bowl caliber" given closing point spreads vs. Wake Forest and Louisville. This defensive unit doesn't grade out anywhere near bowl caliber.

MLB playoffs

Postseason handicapping has become very tricky because managers have dramatically altered in-game pitcher usage from recent seasons. Picking winners is no longer as simple as taking one starter over another. Winning bettors must have a read on which arms will pitch high-leverage innings late in big games. Success in late-series betting may come down to fading teams that are overloading their most important pitchers.

NFL Futures betting: Super Bowl LIV

Looking for betting value as we enter Week 6 of the 2019 NFL season.

MATT BURKE

Matt Burke is a veteran sports journalist and the founder and Editor in Chief of MetroBet.

Fans, sports bettors and sportsbooks alike are incredibly reactionary.

Two weeks ago at MetroBet.us/Sugar the Rams had top three odds to win Super Bowl LIV at +800. After two straight losses, LA's odds of ultimate glory are now sitting at +1600.

Conversely, the Saints were +1400 to win it all two weeks ago but now have the third best odds at +800 following a pair of wins.

The truth of just how good these teams are lies somewhere in the middle, of course.

Would you bet your house on the 4-1 Saints ultimately having a better record than the 3-2 Rams when the complete 2019 NFL book is finally written?

With 12 weeks of the regular season still remaining and a ton of football left to be played, now is a great time to look at value when it comes to futures betting.

In addition to the Rams, here are some other teams worth throwing a few bucks on before their value decreases:

Eagles

The Eagles are at +1200 right now to win Super Bowl LIV and it's unlikely you'll get them over +1000 again for the rest of the season if they win at Minnesota Sunday.

Ravens

Baltimore toppled a desperate Steelers team on the road on Sunday. Losses to the Chiefs and Browns threw people off Baltimore's Super Bowl scent but here's saying they'll get it back soon. The Ravens are a juicy +2200 right now.

Seahawks

When we did this Super Bowl futures exercise two weeks ago, we also liked the Seahawks. Seattle was coming off a five point loss at home to the Saints at the time but they responded with two wins in a row. Like Baltimore, they are also +2200 to win it all right now at MetroBet.us/Sugar.

metro.us/horoscopes

- Aries Be careful whom you spar with today. You'll tend to bite off more than you can chew, leaving you in a poor position. Take care of your responsibilities and lie low.
- Taurus The barter system will benefit you. Learning to give and take will provide you with a better understanding of what you can gain as well as what you can offer. Romance is encouraged.
- Gemini Expect emotional manipulation if you get into a debate. Focus on getting things done, not on talking about what you want to do.
- Cancer Participate in events that will help you further your goals. A partnership proposal will be worth checking out. An interesting take on how you can use your skills more effectively will be offered.
- Leo Keep moving forward. Learn all you can and establish what you want. Don't let the changes others make distract you from focusing on your objective.
- Virgo Speak up, get things done and make a difference. Use your experience to make sensible conclusions and choices that will further your interests. Romance is encouraged.

- Libra Consider what it will take to stabilize situations that could disrupt your life. Someone will put demands on you that could wreak havoc on your personal life. Proceed with caution.
- Scorpio The personal touch will be necessary when dealing with sensitive situations. Words matter, and the way you articulate what you want to see happen will make a difference.
- Sagittarius Listen to what others say. If you don't agree, go about your business. If you force your opinion on others, you will waste time and damage your reputation.
- Capricorn Make changes at home or work that will align you with the people you need behind you. A positive change is heading your way.
- Aquarius Spend more time making sure everything is up to date. Look over personal documents, bill payments and contracts. Adjustments you make will save you a bundle. Don't settle for less.
- Pisces The help you offer others will benefit you as well. Someone you encounter will give you something to think about. Love and romance are in the stars, and a commitment can be made. EUGENIA LAST
